

If I could visit someplace new, I would hope it was a car dealership. It would have a lot of cars there too.

It would be new in town. I would go there all the time. Because I like looking at cars and fixing them. I'll fix them up and make them cool.

A new car dealership is nice. I hope it have Chevy Cobalts everywhere. The owner should sale them at low prices.

The cars are the cool part. Having cars everywhere would be better than ever. I would hope I could buy all the cars at a low price. I would paint all the cars black, red, and midnight blue with spoilers and NOS and don't forget the bucket racing seats.

If there was a place that good I would go there as fast as possible. I hope something like that comes to town. I would buy all the cars. All the cars would be nice but it not true so I can not be anywhere like that. I guess I'll stay with the Carriage Chevrolet place until then.

This response reflects a limited degree of proficiency in expository writing skills. The writer selects a new car dealership as a place to visit and cites some reasons in support of this choice. However, the ideas are often repetitive, and word choice is limited. An organizational strategy is attempted, but similar ideas are not clustered. There are some errors in writing conventions, but they do not impede communication.
